

A Baby Pillow Should Never Be Used Until Your Child Reaches Two Years Old

If you are pregnant and anxiously awaiting the birth of your new baby, you more than likely have also been waiting for months and months to lavish your precious infant with all kinds of cute and cuddly welcome home gifts. You literally have an endless selection available to you, in a wide variety of stores. There are cute and cuddly stuffed animals, and of course you just have to get them their very own baby pillow to put in the baby bed with them. It must be ok to buy pillows for babies, since so many of your favorite stores carry them, right? This is most definitely NOT the case. Not only is doing such a thing not ok, it can be very dangerous, and can even be fatal to put a stuffed animal or baby pillow in the same bed with your newborn or infant baby. It does not matter if your adorable baby sleeps in his or her very own baby bed or in a bassinet, putting any type of pillow or other item such as a furry little stuffed animal can actually be deadly.

A variety of things are used in the making of these pillows, and any one of them could be harmful for your baby. It is no secret that all newborn babies have very sensitive skin. Your newborns skin could become irritated very easily from the various dyes and fabrics that are used to make a baby pillow.

Many parents who buy a baby pillow for their little bundle of joy, are only trying to be helpful, and think of the comfort of their baby. However, if you are expecting, the very first thing you can do for the benefit of your new baby, is become educated on many of the safety issues that can literally mean the life and death of your baby. To put it simply, there are far too many risks that outweigh any good that can come from putting a pillow close to your baby until they have reached two years old. Even at two years of age, some toddlers are not ready for a baby pillow. It is advised by many researchers, that until a child reaches the age of two years old, and they have outgrown the need for a baby bed, you should not use pillows. Similar Blogs [Baby head pillow ...
